My Role: Lead Designer, Media Designer,
Exhibition Curation & Execution

Growing up in Shandong, I was surrounded by the history and cultural legacy of Qi culture. Yet I gradually realized that the challenge was not a lack of cultural resources, but the distance between traditional knowledge and contemporary audiences. Developed as a real public cultural project in Zibo, Wind from the East gave me the opportunity to explore how digital media could reconnect cultural content, spatial experience, and public engagement.

As Project Lead Designer, I led the six-month design and implementation process, covering cultural research, experience strategy, spatial planning, digital media, interaction design, and on-site delivery. The completed venue spans 4,093 m², including 2,705 m² of exhibition space, with 70+ interactive installations and approximately 95 minutes of digital content, forming an integrated digital cultural experience centered on Qi culture.
